James. 8 Lidgate, In Chaucers Flower of Curtesie. and not at clergymen only, but of all the meaner sort and condition, they would have none marry but such as are rich and able to maintain wives, because their parish belike shall be pestered with orphans, and the world full of beggars; but 1 these are hardhearted, unnatural, monsters of men, shallow politicians, they do not 2 consider that a great part of the world is not yet inhabited as it ought, how many colonies into America, Terra Australis incognita, Africa, may be sent? Let them consult with Sir William Alexanders Book of Colonies, Orpheus Juniors Golden Fleece, Captain Whitburne, Mr. Hagthorpe, &c, and they shall surely be otherwise informed. Those politic Romans were of another mind, they thought their city and country could never be too populous. 8Adrian the emperor said he had rather have men than money, malle se hominum adjectione ampliare imperium, quam pecunid. Augustus Caesar made an oration in Rome ad ccelibes, to persuade them to marry; some countries compelled them to marry of old, as 4 Jews, Turks, Indians, Chinese, amongst the rest in these days, who much wonder at our discipline to suffer so many idle persons to live in monasteries, and often marvel how they can live honest. 6 In the isle of Maragnan, the governor and petty king there did wonder at the Frenchmen, and admire how so many friars, and the rest of their company could live without wives, they thought it a thing impossible, and would not believe it. If these men should but survey our multitudes of religious houses, observe our numbers of monasteries all over Europe, eighteen nunneries in Padua, in Venice thirty-four cloisters of monks, twentyeight of nuns, &...
