Chaliar and Glenard treated fourteen of their thirtynine cases of abdominal gunshot wounds with simple drainage of the pouch of Douglas with intraperitoneal injections of ether and oil of camphor. They also injected oil of camphor subcutaneously and employed the Fowler position. There were ten deaths among the fourteen patients. None of the patients were operated on within ten hours after injury and some were operated on as late as the fourth day. Table 3 shows the results of simple suprapubic drainage in fifty-five cases.² TABLE 3--RESULTS OF SUPRAPUBIC DRAINAGE IN FIFTY-FIVE CASES Bouvier and Caudrelier: 16 operated on in less than 3 hours, 8 deaths, 8 cures. 11 operated on in less than 5 hours, 5 deaths, 6 cures. 2 operated on in less than 6 hours, 2 deaths, 0 cures. Lapointe: 14 operated on in the first 7 hours, 8 deaths, 6 cures 12 operated on after the first 7 hours, 12 deaths, 0 cures. What may be called the internationally accepted treatment of patients not to be operated on consists in rest in the recumbent position with shoulders raised and knees flexed. This position relaxes the abdominal musculature and adds to the comfort of the patient. No attempt should be made to move the patient unless the move is unavoidable, nor should he be permitted to move himself. If he is moved before the operation, the Fowler position should be maintained during transport. Food by the mouth should be interdicted and water likewise should be forbidden, unless neither nausea nor gas is present. A teaspoonful of water at intervals of fifteen minutes may be given by mouth to moisten the dry mucosa. Food and water may be given by the bowel in the case of lesions of the small intestine or the stomach, the common sites of perforation. Opiu...
